II Short answer/short question

1) US support was of vital importance for European integration because they demanded the European countries to cooperate if they should receive financial aid to recover after the World War 2.

The Marshall plan set two conditions for financial aid:

- 1) The end of barriers on the borders and
- 2) it was up to the Europeans to distribute the aid, something that created the OEEC

The establishment of NATO and the US, large degree of interest in rest-European politics was very important with regard to the threat from USSR. US was very keen to have West-Germany as a part of European integration and the Western world.

So, the US with their Marshall plan and huge interest in European politics made some understand that the only way to recover and grow economically is to collaborate on things with common interest which gave the rise of ECSC in 1951, which was a pooling of coal and steel resources.

2) Core function at the European parliament

- + The European Parliament's origin are quite modest. It was called the Common Assembly. Through various reforms and treaties they have increased their powers and have become a very influential institution in the EU

- ~~with~~ The European Parliament is the only democratic elected body in the EU and is therefore a legitimate power at the EU

With the introduction of co-decision procedure the EP has become a legislative power instead of just a institution who needed to be consulted like they were in the early days of European integration.

The European Parliament have also increased their power in what we can call "parliament" function as they now have the opportunity to dismiss the commission and they have the opportunity to veto a assignment at a commissioner if they do not feel the person is suited for the job.

The European Parliament has also get a huge budgetary role as any budget expenditure need the approval from the EP.

~~As~~ ~~informs~~ They also try to have a scrutiny role even though that is quite problematic because a lot of the ~~decision making~~ <sup>the work in the</sup> council and commission is ~~behind~~ behind closed doors

When it comes to the organization of EP they work in committees, they are separated in cross national party preference and they have plenary sessions.

The EP is what we can call a supranational body of the EU and is often referred to as pro integrationist, which as we can see of what I have written earlier has increased their power a lot with the claim that they are the only legitimate institution of the EU.

EU as an optimum currency area:

- It is an economist approach on when it is economically beneficial to have a single currency or fixed exchange rates.

For somethi. For a region to be a optimum currency area you need:

- 1) labour mobility
- 2) similar business cycle
- 3) capital mobility
- 4) financial transfer mechanism
- 5) fiscal cooperation

I will in this assignment apply for three of the criterai:

labour mobility:

with the common market, in theory it should be free movement of people, and in addition the Schengen agreement you are allowed to travel without passport in all countries which are in this agreement.

So in theory I mean that this criteria is ~~not~~ <sup>accomplished</sup>. We can also see it that for example a lot of polacs go to norway to work and have the same working condition as their norwegians have.

But I do not think there are a full labour mobility because there are many obstacles which prevent people from having a full mobility. That could be that a lot of countries can not manage to give the same working conditions as for example they have in the Scandinavian countries, when it comes to salary, working time and so forth. So in theory it is accomplished, but in practice there are to much socio economic gap to get full mobility.

Similar business cycle:

It refers to that economic growth or economic decline will enter approximately at the same time within and between the countries. This is so the ECB, European central bank will have greater opportunity to influence the economy in the Area.

As we can see after the financial crisis we have had the last couple of years this is not the case. There are huge differences in business cycles within the union. where some countries are doing quite well as others have huge problems.

This could be a problem because as when one country need to have a low interest rate set by the ECB another country wants to have a relatively high interest rate so the inflation will not rise.

Even though all countries are interdependent of each other I do not think this criteria is accomplished in the EU.

Capital mobility (financial transfer mechanism)

As of the common market they have accomplished capital mobility in the sense that everyone who ~~wants~~ to invest in the EU country are free to transfer their money between and within the countries.

As a conclusion I do not think the EU is a fully fledged optimum currency area, but on the other hand I think there are almost no country or region who are. Even in a small country like Norway we can see that there are no similar business cycle.

Five core principles of EU regional policy:

- * First I will say that the ultimate goal of the European regional policy is to make the disparity between the regions smaller.

1) coordination

- you need to coordinate the several structural funds so they work together to prevent the disparities between countries and regions. These structural funds are: ESP (European social fund), ERDF (European regional development fund), EAGGF (European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund). (the guidance part)

- 2) additionality

The "aid" and help shall not be instead of national regional policy but in addition.

- concentration

The aim is to concentrate the help and aid to the areas who need it the most. This principle has had huge consequences because of the enlargement of countries who were not that developed.

ESSAY QUESTION EU'S EASTERN ENLARGEMENT

The EU's eastern enlargement has to be seen together with the huge event of the communist collapse. With the fall of the Berlin wall the EU suddenly had to take into consideration a range of countries which were between the western world and Russia.

While the other enlargement were countries which either regret that they did not join at the beginning such as UK, Ireland and Denmark or countries who had no problem fitting the Copenhagen criteria the CEE countries were far behind matching these criteria.

After the 1995 enlargement there was simply no more countries who fitted the original EU context except from Norway, Switzerland and Iceland who did not want to join of various reasons.

The process of eastern enlargement has been highly technical and complex and it has taken several years from the first CEE countries first obliged for membership until they finally joined.

The core element is the Copenhagen criteria which states have to achieve for getting to be a candidate country. It is the council who unanimously has to accept a country to join. There are several steps in this process. First a country has to apply, then it is the commission who sample up information about this country according to where they are in the process of achieving these Copenhagen criteria. The commission will draft a proposal to the council whether they think a country should get candidate status or not. If they got candidate status it is a huge political recognition from the memberstates that they will intensify their relationship. After that they start the negotiating process with each applying state.

Emnekode : ST-202

Ark nr. : 7 av 8

This is a long process which ultimately lead to accession in the EU or a delay or in the worst case in rejection.

Romania and Bulgaria could not become a fully fledged member at the first time of negotiating so the huge expansion was first from 15 to 25 countries. Romania and Bulgaria joined later so there are now 27 members in the EU.

- To meet some critical voices of the existing memberstates there is possible to implement sanctions if countrys do not fulfill their obligations.
- The EU enlargement policy is the most sucessfull foreign policy issue. In that I mean that enlargement is a very good measure to influence other countries.

There are several reasons why the EU enlarge. We have to see it from both the ~~the~~ existing EU's side and the applying countries.

First of all the EU wanted to enlarge because that is a good way to implement democracy and market economy in Europe. As of meeting the copenhagen criteria the applying countries was forced to implement these two core principles of the western world. The EU finds this beneficial both in economically and in moral terms. Getting them countries in the EU would make the common market area bigger which are of huge positive consequence for the EU as an economic and global power. It would eventually after the new member countries met the convergence criteria also make the Euro stronger and maybe make it a option to the dollar.

As I mentioned earlier the EU enlargement also have a moral dimension that is trying to get the social disparity between countries in Europe smaller. It could be superficial to think that the existing EU members would want to let countries join so they have to pay more and get less when it comes to EU's regional policy, but I think that EU as a huge civilian power also saw that moral dimension when they decided to let the countries join the EU.

Also, implementing the CEE countries made the countries going further away from the Russia.

When it comes to the reason why the CEE countries wanted to join economically beneficial or of huge importance. A opportunity for joining the common market with free movement of goods, services, capital and people would help them recovering from the USSR period. Additionally there was a huge opportunity to get regional funds and help in creating new structures in their country.

- I will in the end say that for the applying countries there could bee seen a option between the western world or closer collaboration with Russia.
